

— A PLACE FOR STEPPING BACK

House Schmagerow

WILDLAND

Two days and more, away from everything — room to examine the patterns you lead by, with the distance and stillness this place affords.

We have always loved this place: the openness of the land, the quiet, the wide skies that let you see further than usual. It puts things in proportion.

This is where we want to host people who are ready to step back: leaders willing to examine their own patterns of thought and decision-making, and the patterns of the systems they lead, with the distance and stillness this place affords.

Individuals and groups can use this space to work through strategic and organisational issues that call for handling ambiguity and complexity, rather than resolving it prematurely.

The house holds different kinds of work. We run our own Transformation Intensive Course here. External groups come for leadership development, strategic work or team retreats – structured workshops and unstructured time among peers, room to notice what is working in their leadership and their organisations, and what needs to change.

House Schmagerow can hold a few days of someone's working life: time for reflection, for testing ideas, for deciding what to do next. Many guests return. If you are part of our network, do ask about using the premises for your own courses and retreats.

A house that sleeps eleven

House Schmagerow has four double or twin rooms, three single rooms, and a large living and dining room. Bathrooms are mostly shared – there are six – so the house sleeps eleven. For larger groups, we use accommodation nearby.

The house is booked exclusively – there are no other guests on site during your stay. There is a hot tub in the garden, an open fireplace indoors, and a large grill outside. Catering can be arranged on request; many groups choose instead to cook together, which has become part of how people come to know one another here.

Simple, quiet rooms

Four double or twin rooms and three single rooms, plainly and comfortably furnished.

Room to do the work

The seminar room is in the adjacent building, with fast fibre internet throughout. It comfortably fits fifteen. The room is equipped for serious facilitation work: large whiteboards, flipcharts and a full set of facilitation materials. Breakout work can move into the garden, the living room, or smaller spaces nearby, depending on the group.

Nature to sooth the mind

The house is surrounded by a large garden with a pond and old trees, with plenty of room – inside and out – for all kinds of activities. In the garden you'll find a hot tub and a wood-fired sauna, and the quiet to use them properly.

What happens in between

The work continues – in conversation by the sauna, over a shared meal, on a walk across the fields. Many groups cook together; it has become part of how people come to know one another here.
